one of four sisters that Josh Duggar allegedly fondled when he and they were minors, told Fox News Channel's Megyn Kelly in an interview today.

"I'm like, 'that is so overboard and a lie really.' I mean people get mad at me for saying that, but I can say this because I was one of the victims," Jessa said during the interview, which will be telecast on tonight's The Kelly File. She described what her brother did as being "very wrong." According to a second report made public this morning by In Touch magazine, Josh Duggar, when he was a teen, allegedly fondled the breasts and genital area of four of his sisters, one of whom was 5-years-old at the time.

PREVIOUS: Fox News Channel's Megyn Kelly interviewed two of the Duggar daughters, Jill and Jessa, for tonight's broadcast. It will be the first time any of Josh Duggar's alleged victims have been named. All police reports posted by In Touch magazine, which broke the news of Josh Duggar having, when he was a teen, fondled five minors including four of his sisters, redacted the names of the victims.

Jessa is now in her early 20s and married to Ben Seewald and expecting her first child. Jill, also in her 20s, is married to Derick Dillard, and has a child.

Kelly's interview with these two particular victims may make it tough for TLC to move ahead with any plan to wipe the ick off the franchise but salvage the audience. When the story first broke, among the ideas being tossed about was maybe dumping 19 Kids And Counting and instead doing a spinoff series focusing on the two grown and married daughters, who are now living away from parents Jim Bob and Michelle Duggar. To that point, Kelly told Deadline last night, "[Jim Bob and Michelle] very much understand their show and reputation are on the line." But, she said, the Duggars also believe the show "has a chance still. It's not totally done."

"I think they knew they needed to speak to somebody and get their story out," Kelly added — their story being that the information about their son and daughters was "released without their consent."
